About Nature For All:

The ERT Foundation's "Nature For All" project is a collaborative initiative focused on horticultural education and environmental stewardship along the Elizabeth River Trail (ERT). This program offers hands-on educational experiences to deepen the community's connection with nature and local ecosystems. Field trips, workshops, and gardening projects will take place along the trail, transforming parts of the ERT into interactive classrooms. Current programs include botanical tours with the Norfolk Master Gardeners, events led by EcoGardens, and collaborative community projects.

What you will do:

The Nature For All Intern will help with the planning, coordination, and implementation of Nature For All projects and events under the direction of the Assistant Director. This will include site visits to proposed project areas, participating during the project work days, collaborating with community partners, inviting guest speakers, and assisting with administrative duties that accompany these projects.

We are looking for an intern who can work a hybrid schedule, in office, at home, and on the trail, for 15 hours per week for 10 weeks. Some weekend availability is needed to accommodate tours and project days.

Why you should apply:

This internship is perfect for college students majoring, or interested, in parks, recreation, and tourism studies, agriculture, environmental science/studies, urban planning, landscape design, or other related topics.

The ERT Foundation believes the trail has something for everyone and is FOR everyone, we strongly encourage candidates of all different backgrounds and identities to apply. Even if your major or experience doesn't precisely match the internship description, we are interested in your passion for our mission and building community. Our team and board will support the right intern in growing their skills.
